

Our Mission Statement:

When a child dies, at any age, the family suffers intense pain and may feel hopeless and isolated. The Compassionate Friends provides highly personal comfort, hope, and support to every family experiencing the death of a son or a daughter, a brother or a sister, or a grandchild, and helps others better assist the grieving family.

“What the Hell is Going on out Here”

As a long time Packer fan, that is probably the most shown film clip and quote from Vince Lombardi. He was upset with his team which lead him to this quote and tirade against his players. With all that is going on in the world today and especially our country that is how I feel at times and I am sure many of you also. Today is the first day of Fall, the year is 3/4 over, we have a presidential election in a month, there is racial unrest that reminds me of growing up in the 60's, tropical storms are ravaging the east coast and Gulf of Mexico, forest fires in California and Covid-19 is spiking in many areas as schools open and it seems everyone is tired of staying home and social distancing. Will there be a vaccine and when and how effective will it be, so yes, “What the Hell is Going on out Here.”

Some good news is that in August we were able to resume our meetings at the church with some restrictions, such as facemasks must be worn and no food or drink at our meetings. We must limit our participants to around 10 and if we have more we will divide into 2 groups. Our Candle Lighting ceremony is still on but again we will be social distancing by sitting in every other pew and wearing facemasks. So at least we will be able to gather and see old friends and faces and unfortunately some that are newly bereaved like us. But as you know if cases spike and the church decides it won't be safe for us to meet, we will have to cancel again. If that is the case, we will post something on Facebook and the Website. If you have any questions or wondering if we are meeting you can also call the Chapter cellphone at 920-370-3858. You can leave a voicemail and we will get back to you as soon as possible.

I sometimes find myself envying our children, even though I wish they were still here with us, they don't have to deal with all this stuff that life can throw at us especially now in these difficult times. But I do know that they are watching over us and guiding us during these difficult times. If we are so inclined and it is part of our beliefs, we can reach out and even pray to them to help us through these difficult times and help us navigate these turbulent times. Sometimes I wish I had a crystal ball to see what the future holds but at other times, I am not sure that I really would like to find out what the future has instore for me or us. All I can say is that I hope everyone stays safe and healthy and now on to 2021.

Halloween...Still a Holiday to Remember

Wayne Loder
TCF Lakes Area, MI
In Memory of Stephanie and Stephen Loder

Two Halloweens have now passed since my 8-year-old Stephanie and 5-year-old Stephen left us to live with God.

Even before the kids were old enough to go trick or treating, I still recall their delight at the costumes worn by all the neighborhood kids who came to the door. I still remember how thrilled Stephen was to be handing out the candy when he was only one and half years old. We still have a picture of him holding the plate of goodies. If you look close, you can see where he took a bite out of one of the candy bars (with the wrapper on) and set it back on the plate.

I can still remember the all too few times I was able to take my children out trick-or-treating. I remember my daughter dressed up as a nurse, offering to "fix-up" all those other trick or treaters who were obviously hurting with all that fake blood they were wearing.

I remember Stephen wearing his great pumpkin outfit. We stuffed it so full of padding that when he fell down, not only did he not get hurt, he had to be physically picked up because he was flailing his arms around like a beetle on its back.

I can still see Stef holding Stephen's little hand and patiently leading him up the walkway and helping him hold open his bag so that the candy would find its mark. She always made certain he said thank you for the candy. It usually came out "thank-woo."

The first Halloween following their deaths I remember driving home with tears streaming down my face as I watched the other trick-or-treaters roaming up and down the streets. My wife and I fled our home, depositing bags of candy for our next door neighbors to hand out for us. Last year we found the courage to stick around and greet the ghosts and goblins who found their way to our door. The funny thing was, we felt as dressed up as the trick-or-treaters. We were wearing our "happy face" masks.

The memories are now starting to fade of the Halloweens before our children died. It won't be too long and I'll be leading Christopher, our new son who is now a year old, up those driveways just like I did before. I feel sad that Stef and Steve can't be there. But you know, I have a feeling that if I hold out my hands and close my eyes, two little gloved hands will slip into mine and I'll again hear in unison, "Just one more house Daddy!"

AUTUMN TEARS

Penny Young
TCF Powell River, British Columbia

We look back on September and we realize that somehow we made it through those dreaded first days of school. Whether it was the anticipation or the actual days that were the worst, we survived. We used our faith, our support systems or just plain hard work and made it over yet another hurdle. We watched small children heading for their first day of kindergarten, listened to excited teenagers talk of high school and heard stories of children leaving home to attend post-secondary school. Somehow we rode the waves of grief and found ourselves ashore again.

As these waves subside new ones will build as we head into the holidays that speak of, and to, children. Halloween will soon approach and for some, painful memories. Thanksgiving arrives to exemplify family and togetherness and Christmas looms ahead. These special days are forever reminders of our loss—the costumes we'll never sew, the empty chair at turkey dinner, the fun and magic we'll never share with someone we love. Forever reminders that our child has died.

To survive when these events and anniversary days come around let's find time to think of the good memories we have—the announcement of our long awaited pregnancy at Thanksgiving dinner, the look of excitement on our son's first Halloween night, the vision of our daughter helping prepare the turkey dinner. These holidays will always be reminders that our child died. Let us also make them reminders that our child lived! They left us memories more precious than any others to hold and celebrate!

The Magic of Christmas

Dana Rogers
TCF Galveston County, TX
In Memory of my son, Rick
Mother to Michael

The magic of Christmas, it's contagious. You can't help but get caught up in the joy with the barrage of holiday festivities. We are surrounded with commercials for the perfect gift, the anticipated smells from the kitchen, the Santa's in the Mall with the line of children waiting to ask for their most desired gifts. Your heart can't help but beat a little faster. The houses decorated to express the joy of the season, inside and out, demand your attention. The twinkling lights draw your eye. You can't help but feel the magic of Christmas.

I had my own collection of decorations that occupied a special space in the attic, carefully wrapped and packed away from last year. The collection of ornaments that had been objects of careful selection each year was a prized possession. The other decorations such as sleighs, bells, angels, holly, statues had always bejeweled the house to shout out the joy, magic and anticipation of the season.

My own childhood memories of Christmas' past were precious and served as a starting point to create memories for my own children. Soon after the turkey carcass was thrown out from Thanksgiving, up to the attic we would go and drag the boxes down the narrow attic stairs. "Be sure and get the box with the green lid" I would shout up the stairs, "but be careful. That one contains the glass ornament collection."

The boys would be so excited as their Christmas season began. Their house would be transformed into a winter wonderland all in a day. The season would officially begin as soon as the stockings were hung on the fireplace and the Christmas lists would be started. Catalogs were leafed through and advertisements taken seriously. There was no limit to the lists. The sky was the limit on dreams they were encouraged to dream.

Something happened after losing my son, Rick. The magic is gone, the thrill forgotten. The decorations are no longer in the attic but were given away the first Christmas after Rick died. How could I possibly gather the strength or will to put on such a show? There is no enjoyment, only memories of a joy that once was. The collection of glass ornaments are still wrapped in their tissue in the box with the green lid.

Michael has been robbed of his innocence surrounding Christmas but more than that he was robbed of his brother and future memories. My heart hurts when my mind captures the full scope of my new life. That's when I shut the door on that room in my mind to be visited when I have more strength. But in the meantime another Christmas will come and go.

We have found a new way to observe Christmas. We use that day to honor life and the blessings that are bestowed upon us. We now appreciate family so much more and those in it. We celebrate our family, friends and the love of Christ. We have found that Christmas is not about the decorations, the food, or the gifts. To us Christmas is about the three of us rejoicing in our memories and the love we have in our lives now.

Even as I write this poignant story I do want to express my sincere appreciation for the precious memories that we had as a family when Rick was still here, when his gifts had their own place under the tree, his stocking had a place on the fireplace next to Michael's. The tack hole is still there as a reminder; "He was here".

I'm so thankful for the pictures in my mind and in the photo albums to remind me of the happiness that once was. I'm grateful for the time I had as a mother of young children during the magic of Christmas. Their exhilaration was priceless. I was witness to the sparkle in their eyes and their shivering of excitement on Christmas morning. I was able to go to them on Christmas morning and say, "Santa came." Christmas morning was the ultimate climax of the entire season and it was always as thrilling as promised. I will have these memories for the rest of my life and for that I'm thankful.

THANKSGIVING PRAYER

I'm thankful this Thanksgiving
That my grief is not so new.
Last year it was so painful
To think of losing you.
Death can't claim my love for you
Tho we are far apart,
Sweet memories will always be
Engraved upon my heart.
Time can never bring you back.
But it can help me be
Thankful for the years of joy
You brought our family.
To all the parents with grief so new
I share your loss and sorrow.
I pray you find with faith and time
The blessings of each tomorrow.
